

I strongly oppose allowing cell phones to be used mid-flight. As someone who flies 2-3 times per year, I would find the cacophany unbearable, and very likely to lead to the air equivalent of "road rage". I have often flown red-eye flights, and find that there is already a gross insensitivity on the part of some passengers to keep their voices down during "sleep" periods. If they felt it necessary to raise their voices to be heard on a scratchy cell phone, rather than by the person sitting next to them, it will be much worse.

Thank you for consideration of my opinion.